Once Upon A Time..

THE FLOOD

Charlie Chipmunk was walking down the road when he discovered it. The newspaper was lying right in front of him on the road. Charlie bent down and picked it up.

He started reading it . . . "The people of Animalville are in store for the biggest flood in all history . . ."

Charlie stopped reading. "Flood? FLOOD!" he cried out. "We're going to have a flood!"

He ran madly down the road, clutching the newspaper under his arm. He shouted to the trees, to the skies, to all who could hear. "We're going to have a flood! A FLOOD!"

"What are you talking about?" Oliver Owl asked from his tree.

"Didn't you hear me?" said Charlie. "This newspaper says we're going to have a flood!"

"My gosh!" said the owl. "We'd better spread the word. You take the low road, and I'll take the sky road!"

So owl flew through the sky, stopping at every tree, telling every bird to get ready for the flood.

And Charlie Chipmunk raced down the road, informing all the animals of Animalville to prepare for the flood.

"We'd better get together in a meeting," advised smart Stevie Squirrel. "Let's all meet at the edge of the forest."

"Right!" said the animals one and all, and a short time later, the big meeting was held.

"The meeting will now come to order," said Oliver Owl, who was immediately chosen as president.

"We've got to be calm," the owl pointed out. "We can't jump to quick conclusions. We've got to think this thing out."

"I think we all ought to get into the trees," Stevie Squirrel suggested.

"But how can I get up there?" asked a great big tortoise.

"Well you'll have to settle your own problems," said a rabbit.

"Order! Order!" pleaded Oliver Owl.

"Yes, we've got to think straight!" said Charlie Chipmunk, who began to wave the newspaper.

"Think straight?!" a mole blurted out. "He's waving a newspaper that says a flood is coming—and he wants us to think! I say this is the time for action!"

"Action! Action!" all the animals began to shout, and then they began to run.

"Wait! Wait!" Charlie Chipmunk cried out. But no one was listening.

Only Charlie Chipmunk heard his voice say, "This newspaper is twenty years old!"

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

Better Than BEAUTY

Blackberry gazed lovingly into his mistress's eyes as she spoke to him. Her voice was so soft and gentle... she never really scolded, he thought...

"You're such a good dog, Blackberry!" Janie smiled, scooping him up in her arms. "If only you were—pretty!" Blackberry's stubby little tail drooped forlornly. He knew he wasn't—well—handsome—but it wasn't his fault, was it?

"You see, 'Berry," his mistress went on, "I've entered you in the Dog Show! Oh, I know you don't stand much of a chance against all those fancy dogs, but you are cute, and you know so many tricks! I thought maybe—just maybe—you might win!"

Blackberry shook his head sadly. He slipped out of Janie's arms without a sound, his tail drooping unhappily between his legs.

"The Show is tomorrow, Blackberry!" Janie called after him. "Try—oh, please try—to win!"

And the next day, at the Dog Show, he sat in his stall with his head hanging, his tail drooping—the perfect picture of canine misery! He knew he should perk up for Janie's sake, but somehow, his heart just wasn't in it. He watched all the other proud, perfumed and petted dogs being led to their places, their noses high in the air, and he knew he didn't stand a chance.

"Hey, you!" rumbled a deep bass voice in Blackberry's ear, so suddenly that it made him jump! He peered over the side of his box, and found himself looking into the eyes of the ugliest bulldog he'd ever seen! In spite of himself, Blackberry shuddered.

To 'Berry's surprise, the other dog merely laughed at him. "I know I'm ugly!" the bulldog grinned. "But you don't have to be afraid of me, youngster! I'm really as gentle as a lamb, and I've won first prize in more Dog Shows than you can count!"

"YOU?!" gasped Blackberry. "YOU'VE won prizes?! But how?! You—you..." He stopped suddenly, realizing what he was saying.

Again the bulldog only laughed. "Don't be embarrassed, kid!" he boomed. "You didn't hurt my feelings! I know how I look! But looks aren't all that matter, you know. Spirit and friendliness and intelligence mean something, too! This must be your first show..."

He broke off as the little group of judges approached his stall. Blackberry straightened up proudly, his head high, his tail waving! Janie's parting words rang in his ears. "I don't really care if you win or not, 'Berry!" she'd whispered. "I'll love you just the same!"

Spirit... friendliness... intelligence... those things counted just as much as looks, and he had them all! The judges must have thought so, too, because they all began to smile and nod when they came to Blackberry...!
